Step 1: Complete the following ‘mad lib’. Consult with your partner to fill in the blanks.

Back in ________________, I took a ________________ ride across to ________________.
(year) (kind of transportation) (destination)

Along the way, I sat next to one of the ________________, ________________ people I’d ever met.
(adjective) (adjective)

Turns out, the name of the person was ___________________________ and the (whitespace)

person had just written an article all about ________________ and what happens when (author of a children’s book) _______________ is compared to a rural community_______________.

(mythical god/goddess) (rural location)

The article sounded so interesting to me, because at the time,
I had just learned about ________________ and my favorite ________________.
(a monster) (kind of fruit or vegetable)

The article had a ________________ title; it reminded me of__________________ (adjective) (a horrible smell)

and it was called:
“__________________ Eating Habits When Exposed to ________________ in ________________.”
(author of a children’s book) (1st mythical god/goddess) (rural location) _________________________ had just had the article published in ________________ by this (first and last name from before) (Month) academic journal called The Journal of the History of _____________________________.

(name of a possible major at SUNY Plattsburgh)

Can you believe it? The article starts on page 78 and goes on for _________ pages?!
(a number)
Step 2: Write a bibliography citation for the journal article

Now, using the terms your group just came up with, write a citation, conforming as closely as possible to either the Chicago or APA style guide:

Chicago

APA
Author(s). (Year). Title of Article. Title of Journal, Volume(Issue), pages.
